Now With F.M.L.

A wise man was telling a story, more a legend.

There was a light-skinned man who came among the Indians of Central America in the time when jungle and heat and spare agricultural ways dominated.

This was perhaps two thousand years ago.

And the light-skinned man encouraged building, even introducing the mathematics and technics of pyramids like the Egyptians thousands of water miles away and eons ahead in development.

And these natives raised pyramids and built temples in clearings and established religion and culture and calendars and astronomy and skills that built a civilization.

And the light-skinned man went away, rather disappeared, just as he had appeared, apparently from the sea. He had, the wise man suggests, navigated from that other world across the sea, perhaps as far as from North Africa or Southern Europe as we now know them.

And jungles finally claimed the cities and water was short, drought apparently driving people back into the wilderness. The outline of a great civilization, all the elements remained except the people who abandoned it, and the light-skinned man who vanished.

The wise man finished the story. And he looked at me. And I wondered if he knew something I did not know.

"Why would such a man do such things and leave?" my eyes questioned.

"Perhaps because he could do no more," the wise man ended, all but reading my mind.

NOW - NOW - NOW

James Cagney, the versatile, gutsy, brilliant "tough guy" of about 60 movies of the 30s , 40s, and 50s was honored a few weeks ago by the film industry.

And he said, among other things:

"I was advised a long time ago that show business success meant:

"Walking up, planting both feet and telling the truth,"

And any one who has seen Cagney the dancer, Cagney the gangster, Cagney the underdog, Cagney the winner knows that he lived this advice.

LOST IN THE CITY - The Herald's George Jones shows the crane-like bird that was found in front of the Back Door Shoppe, which he took home to feed. The bird, which is believed to b some sort of water bird, had long legs, beak and rusty brown feathers. Its bady eyes could look in any direction and it loves the minnows George is feeding.

CATTLE PRICES DOWN

Cattle prices went down again at the Cameron Livestock Auction Thursday, continuing a downward trend seen this spring. Prices compared unfavorably with those of last week and those of last year at this time.

Receipts were down also with 440 cattle and calves consigned compared with 685 last week. Slaughter cows and bulls were lower and all feeder cattle steers, heifers and calves were lower. Cow and calf pairs were also down.

Choice feeder steers and bulls brought $41.50 to $45, down from last week's price of $47 to $51.50 and way down from last year's price of $73 to $77. Choice feeder heifers brought $37 to $41 Thursday, compared with $40 to $45 last week and $54 to $59 last year.

Good cow and calf pairs that sold for $295 to $380 last week were down to $290 to $330 Thursday. A few choice pairs brought a higher price of $365 to $500.

The drop in feeder prices and demand apparently is caused by feedlots curtailing purchase of stock, since feed prices are sky-high and show no signs of dropping.

Tommy Chamberlain, buyer for Chamberlain Meats, said prices have shown a downward trend since the first of the year, and have never fully recovered after the freeze on prices last year.

He said feedlot owners were not buying as many calves to go back into the lots since the feed prices have not dropped. A bumper grain crop this year may result in lower feed prices, but Chamberlain said "that's anybody's guess."

The hog market showed a slight rise Thursday but prices are still below those of last year at this time. US 1-3 barrows and gilts sold for $28 to $29, compared with $33.50 and $34.10 last year.

Harper Sees Expansion For Aluminum Needs

Aluminum markets are "exceptionally strong" and Alcoa will expand primary facilities to meet growing demand "as earnings attain levels that will sustain increased capital investment," chairman John D. Harper told Aluminum Company of America shareholders at their annual meeting.

The tight aluminum supply situation, Alcoa's chief executive officer said, "will not change for the next several years."

Alcoa, which produces more aluminum in Texas than any other state, is currently constructing a fourth facility near Palestine in Anderson County. When the East Texas plant begins operation next year, Texas will surpass Washington as the nation's largest aluminum-producing state.

Emphasizing the need for more return on investment, Harper said, "For many years, Alcoa has invested more in new facilities than has been available from current revenues. In 1974, for example, we plan to invest a record $300 million in new plants and facilities. This is $37 million more than the company's 1973 combined depreciation and net profit -- and that's before provision for dividends and repayment of debt principal.

"Revenues simply have not kept pace with inflated prices for new production facilities and environmental control equipment.

"Yet, despite persistent inflation and inadequate earnings -- and despite today's growing costs of labor, materials and environmental control -- we cannot ignore the country's need for more aluminum and our responsibility to supply it. We must modernize. We must expand our metal output. We must attain a level of earnings that will allow us to do so."

While noting that Alcoa's first quarter profits set a dollar record and were "pretty good", Harper described the failure of industry and most news accounts to report profits on the basis of return on investment.

Toward Relative Normal?

But, perhaps the private sector is reining its desire and/or need for additional charges.

Example: U. S. Steel, nation's largest prime metal producer, went up only 5.7 percent, compared to predictions of 15 to 20 percent.

If other basic industry leaders hold this line, the lifting of controls may work. They weren't working in force other than intimidating the economy which went inflationary anyway.

If labor, agriculture finance and other basic segments of the economy can maintain this discipline, it may be a plateau looking over a gently sloping off into relatively normal economic times.

Public Faux Pas....

Spiro Agnew went the final step downward as an attorney late last week when he was disbarred in Maryland.

He has a new book coming out, but his livelihood as an author is closely related to politics, which his attorney status enabled.

He had pleaded for probationary action, short of losing his right to practice law. That is gone.

It is not likely the public now will follow his authorship much beyond the drama of a volatile vice-presidency and tax-evasion departure.

He has opened a new Pandora's box, entering that of a large number of aspiring authors equally gifted in the language and less conspicuous in the public faux pas.

Life Still For Living, Cancer Victim Believes

By Ronald Clarke

CHICAGO

Reuter -- Orville Kelly is dying of cancer.

But, while driving home from a hospital on a golden autumn evening last year, he realized that life still was for living.

"I decided I had wasted too much time already," he said "I was certainly not happy about death, but I had to learn to live with cancer."

The result was that Kelly, a burly 43-year-old father of four children, has set up an organization called Make Today Count.

Members are, like himself, dying of disease. The object is to tell them not to waste their last days -- "To stop thinking about dying and to start thinking about living," said Kelly.

So far the organization has four branches, Three are in Kelly's home state of Iowa where he lives in the town of Burlington, near the Illinois border, and the fourth is in Connecticut.

Fifty people attended the last meeting of Kelly's Burlington branch -- people who knew their days were numbered, and members of their families and nurses who wanted to try to understand the problems of dying.

"We talk about each other's illnesses, but the main idea is to be normal. We are still living," Kelly said.

At present Kelly has a cold, which is affecting his lungs. This means he has to stop the big dosage of drugs he takes each day. In between bouts of coughing, he said, "The pain comes on and off. It is not continuous."

He does not knwo when he will die, whether death is years or months away. "We are all terminal, we all die eventually," he said.

Kelly realized on his autumn drive that his fear of death was robbing him of using his last days.

He had become withdrawn after learning last spring that he had incurable cancer. His wife, Wanda, and his children were becoming nervous.

The children knew something was wrong, but they did not know what," Kelly said. "Driving home on that day, I knew I was going to tell them I had cancer and then we were going to have a picnic in the back garden."

"Now that the whole matter of my having cancer is in the open and the family can cope with it better. The children are doing better at school now that they know.

Kelly is making plans for the future, knowing that it may be short. He has made notes for a book on living with cancer, but he said his cold has delayed him on this project.

People in other states have invited him to visit them and set up Make Today Count branches. He hopes to make the trips, but at the moment he is housebound.

Kelly, who worked for weekly newspapers in Illinois until pneumonia and other health problems three years ago prevented him from working full time, also has a full calendar of lectures awaiting him.

He tells his listeners of a schoolfriend who recently sympathized with him. "Then I read my friend had died of a heart attack," he says.

The aim of a person dying of cancer, he believes, isto continue to live a normal routine life. They should walk through woods and appreciate the beauty of nature or walk along the seashore and smell the salt, he says.

Kelly receives hundreds of letters and telephone calls People find he always has time to talk. He is very patient and never looks harassed.

Famous 'Dancing Waters' Signed For Seven Seas

Towers of shimmering water build to crescendo, sway to waltz melodies and bounce to contemporary rhythms.

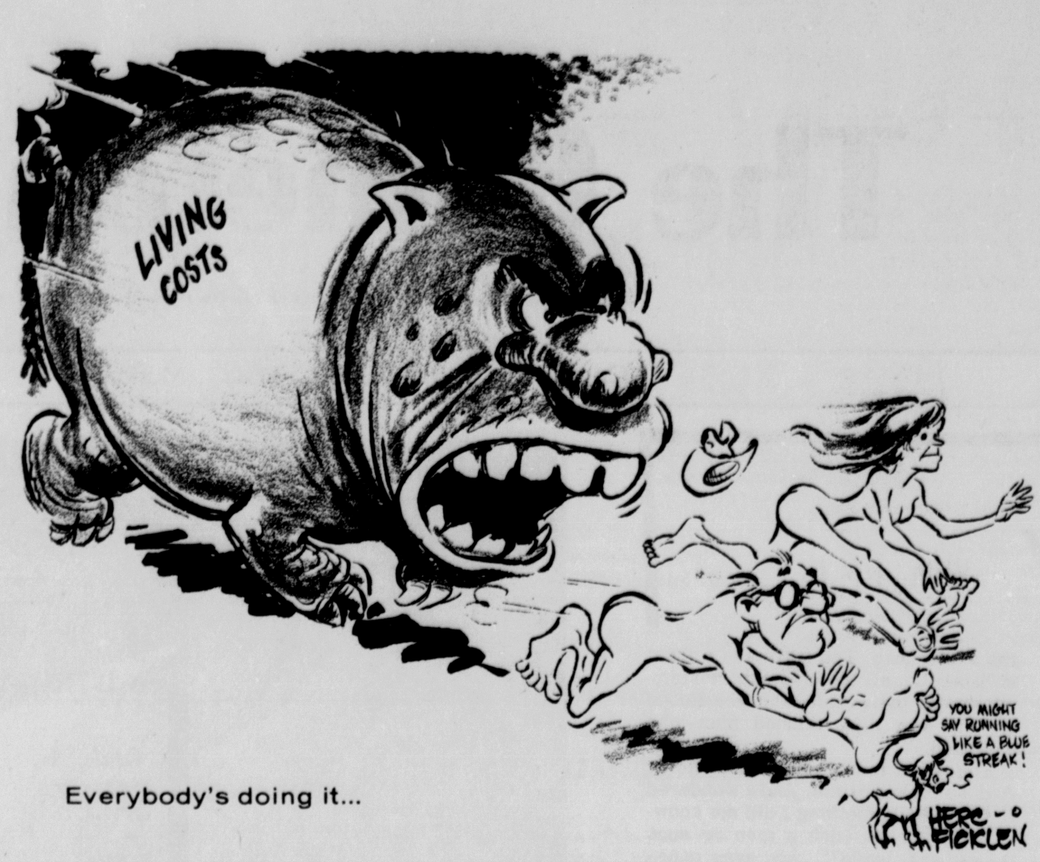
It is part of the performance of the internationally - famed "Dancing Waters" spectacle which has been booked for the 1974 season at Seven Seas marine life park in Arlington.

The performance described by actor Danny Thomas as "The most thrilling 'high' in show business," has been seen by millions at world's fairs, Radio City Music Hall and in Las Vegas.

At Seven Seas the "Dancing Waters" will be presented several times each day in the lagoon adjoining the park's Japanese Pavilion.

The console from which a technician "plays" the waters in time to recorded music will be situated in the pavilion, giving Seven Seas visitors a rare opportunity to see the complex electronic operation which produces the fascinating show.

During special nighttime openings at Seven Seas there will be an added dimension to the performance as the undulating fountains are bathed in multi-colored lights.



Everybody's doing it...

Oil, Bolos Are Making Venezuela Rich Nation

By Andrew Tarnowski

CARACAS

Reuter -- In Venezuela, the land where oil and "el bolo" reign supreme, there is a new sense of destiny in the air.

Almost overnight oil and an avalanche of "bolos" -- the nation's currency -- are making Venezulea the richest nation in Latin America.

The 12 million Venezuelans feel they are facing an historic crossroads -- flung headlong into the limelight of world affairs thanks to the energy crisis.

At their head is President Carlos Andres Perez, a tough, 51-year-old nationalist who proclaims a "great Venezuela" and tells his people they are summoned to "an all-important rendevous with history" over the next five years.

"El Bolo," nickname for the untra-stable bolivar, is the key to the country's sudden prominence and the new vistas opening up before it.

Anything between 34 and 43 billion bolivares in foreign currency -- between 8.3 and 10.4 billion dollars -- will pour into the government's coffers from oil earnings in 1974.

This shower of black gold will make the country four times wealthier than in 1973, thanks to price hikes that raised its oil from 3.15 to 14.08 dollars per barrel between January, 1973, and January, 1974.

It will also make Venezuela's export earnings bigger than the combined total 1974 exports of Brazil and Argentina -- Latin America's traditional economic giants.

As the world's third largest oil exporting nation, and the U.S.'s biggest supplier , there seems no doubt that Venezuela's prominence is assured for years to come.

It was underlined when Pat Nixon attended President's Perez's inauguration and was followed here by French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert and U. S. Treasury Secretary George Shultz.

President Perez, who took over on March 12 after a landslide election victory in December, has the backing of most venezuelans to pull the country out of underdevelopment with his right-of-center brand of "energetic democracy."

The flurry of leftwing guerrilla attacks that marked the week of his inauguration gave politicians an unwelcome surprise but quickly died down.

The Guerrillas have declared war on the new president, who unleased a bitter onslaught against them as interior minister during their heyday in the early 1960's.

Bomb blasts during inauguration week destroyed oil and gas pipelines, damaged department stores owned by U. S. interests and allegedly caused venezuela's worst-ever fire, which destroyed the country's biggest warehouse complex filled with good estimated at 23 million dollars.

But President Perez quickly declared the attacks were carried out by politically powerless groups left over from the 1960's and there was no danger they would upset the peaceful climate of Venezuel'as youthful democracy.

He grabbed world headlines by promising to nationalize Venezuel'as oil industry during his five-year term.

Equally important was his decision to keep oil prices moving up until Latin America and other developing regions obtained "just" prices for-other raw materials on the world market.

But for Venezuelans, it was President Perez's pledge to get development moving in a land where opulence and misery co-exist in startling contrast that grabbed the headlines.

For despite its sudden wealth Venezuela still bears the marks of the total poverty that afflicted it until the oil industry started up about 50 years ago.

Today education, public health, social services, transport, housing and agriculture are all in the doldrums despite the flourishing oil, iron ore and petrochemical industries.

Brand new highways and soaring apartment houses give the capital the look of a boom city.

The Cameron Herald
SINCE 1860

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Photogenic Puppy

Irene was so captivated by her new puppy that she took him to a neighborhood photographer for a sitting. The pictures were knockouts. In fact, the photographer decided to sell copies to an advertising agency.

Learning of his intentions, Irene hastened into court for a stop order. And the court granted her request. The judge said that when a customer hires a photographer to take pictures, the pictures become the exclusive property of the customer.

This is the usual rule. While the photographer may retain possession of the negatives, he ordinarily has no right to sell copies without the customer's consent.

It is a different story, however, if the photographer, instead of being hired for the job, takes the picture on his own initiative. Consider this case:

A free lance photographer, putting together an exhibit of his work, took pictures of a prominent businessman. The pictures were his own idea, and he charged nothing for taking them.

Under these circumstances, a court held that the businessman —even though he bought several prints for himself—had no right to pass them along for use in a magazine.

And a free lance photograph of a street scene would not give ownership rights to people whc happened to appear in the picture.

A borderline case arose when a photographer was asked to take pictures of a high school graduating class. Was he entitled to the copyright?

Admittedly, the initiative for the picture had come from the students. Still, they had not promised him any payment at all. He could cash in only if the students should decide, afterward, to order prints.

A court ruled that in all fairness, the copyright did belong to the photographer. Since he was taking that much risk, reasoned the court, he was entitled to that much reward.

Meeting Set To Discuss Brazos River Basin Plan

The Capitol Area Planning Council, the Central Texas Council of Governments, and the Brazos River Authority will sponsor a public meeting May 14 in Temple to discuss development of a water quality management plan for the Brazos River Basin and adjacent Gulf Coast areas.

The basin-wide planning will be discussed in general but the emphasis will be on those aspects relating to Bastrop, Burnet, Lee, Williamson, Bell, Coryell, Hamilton, Lampasas, Milam and Mills counties. Meetings of this type have been scheduled in other sections of the Brazos watershed where specifics of plans affecting those areas will be discussed.

The meeting will be held at 7 p.m. in the Texas Power and Light Building, 204 N. Main St., Temple, Texas.

Colonel Walter Wells, general manager of the authority, said purpose of the meeting is to describe the procedures to be used in developing the basin-wide water quality management plan, present the stream standards and other factors on which the plan will be based, answer questions about the planning and offer opprtunnity for comment and suggestions from the public.

The Authority was designated by the Governor's Office more than two years ago as the State agency to develop a basin-wide plan for improving and protecting the quality of surface water in the 45,000 square miles of the Brazos Basin and adjoining areas of the Gulf Coast. The basin-wide plan will provide the basis for actions in the above counties needed to meet the effluent limitations and stream standards established by the Texas Water Quality Board under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act Amendments of 1972.

Wells said interested citizens and citizen groups, representatives of governmental agencies, representatives of business and industry, farmers and ranchers and "all who are interested in good water" are invited to attend the meeting.

"Public meetings are being held throughout the Brazos Basin to assure that the basin-wide plan is responsive to the desires and needs of the people in the planning area", Colonel Wells said.

The plan is being developed by environmental engineers, water quality specialists and other staff members of the Authority, working in close cooperation with the Texas Water Quality Board, the Division of Planning Coordination in the Governor's office and regional planning agencies and local governments in the planning area. All of these agencies, with other interested State and Federal agencies, are represented on a Planning Advisory Committee established by the Authority to help guide the planning and assure proper coordination with all concerned.

Britain Seeks Island Cutbacks

By Seaghan Maynes

LONDON Reuter -- Britain's new Labor government is likely to take a long, hard look at U. S. plans to expand naval, airfield and other facilities on the British island of Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean.

The expansion was agreed in principle last month between the United States government and the then British Conservative government, which was ousted in the Feb. 28 general election. A formal agreement has still to be concluded.

Diego Garcia, a tiny blob of coral, smack in the middle of the Indian Ocean, has assumed strategic importance with the build-up of the Soviet navy in the region because it could be developed into a nuclear Polaris submarine location.

Such a prospect has alarmed non-aligned Asian nations on the fringes of the Indian Ocean. They have been trying to get the superpowers to recognize the ocean as a nuclear-free sea of peace, clear of east-west power rivalry.

The United States and the previous British Conservative government had dismissed as "unrealistic" the concept of a neutralized Indian Ocean, championed by Sri Lanka, formerly Ceylong, and India as well as other southeast Asian countries.

The two western powers are concerned about the steadily-increasing number of Soviet warships operating in the Indian Ocean now that the west's dependence on oil from the Gulf states has increased and both the Russians and the Chinese have moved to establish political footholds in the area.

Political and military observers here believe that the new British Labor government, which made a pre-election promise to seek the removal of American Polaris bases from Britain, will be more receptive than its conservative predecessors to the objections of the Asian commonwealth nations to any nuclear base in Diego Garcia.

The horseshoe-shaped coral atoll encompassing a 13 mile-long lagoon came into prominence in 1966 when Britain agreed to let the United States use the island for joint defense activities.

Since then the Americans have built up a "limited naval communications facility" to close a communications gap in the Indian Ocean and also provide links with American and British ships and planes. This involved construction of an 8,000 feet airfield.

Even this limited Anglo-American project was causing anxiety to countries in the Indian Ocean area, aware that the Soviet Union was also establishing a naval presence there.

They wanted the withdrawal of naval and military bases as well as the Soviet fleet.

The issue was raised by Sri Lanka at the commonwealth heads of government conference in Singapore in 1971 but the views then expressed apparently had little effect on the major powers.

Last January the British Conservative government's foreign and commonwealth office Minister, Lady Tweedsmuir, told Parliament here: "While we have given careful consideration to the idea of an Indian Ocean peace zone, it seems to us to be unrealistic because a peace zone covering such an area, even if it could be defined which is questionalbe, would be impossible to verify."

Beef Conference Set At Amarillo

The second annual Texas Beef Conference will be conducted May 9-10 at the Hilton Inn Interstate 40 East in Amarillo. Sponsors are the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, Texas Agricultural Etension Service, Texas Cattle Feeders Association, Texas Tech University and West Texas State University.

NULLIFY GROWTH

Every year insects and disease nullify about a fifth of the United State's timber growth, nd fire sweeps some three million acres, National Geographic says.

Views Asked On Mail Order Law

Consumers have until June 14 to express their views on getting refunds for prepaid mail order purchases not shipped within 21 days.

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has proposed a revision for the trade regulation involving mail order purchases and refunds. FTC wants to hear opinions concerning the proposed revision, she added.

Basically, the new revision would extend a firm's allowable refund time from 21 days to 30 days.

In the new act, if a seller cannot act on an order within 30 days -- due to circumstances beyond his control -- he could delay shipment. However, to do this, he would have to send the buyer a notice and receive th buyer's consent before the time limit expired. If the buyer didn't respond the seller would have to send him a refund.

Consumers can send written comments on the proposed revision to: Assistant Director for Marketing Practices, Bureau of Consumer Protection, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C. 20580, Miss Bourland said.

In case of extended credit, the seller would have to credit a buyer's account for merchandise not shipped, the specialist continued, citing other parts of the proposed revision.

New Course Offered At U Of Texas

A new course in inexpensive print and non-print media will be offered next fall and on a shorter scale this summer at The University of Texas.

The course will be taught by Dr. Mark Seng, associate professor of curriculum and instruction, and is geared toward helping prospective teachers as well as experienced ones to prepare visual aids easily and cheaply.

Students will observe and participate in the construction of a left-handed overhead projector, a slide duplicator, non-photo slides, a photo typesetting machine, black-and-white slides, a styrofoam cutter and a process camera.

Dr. Seng, an inventor - educator, has developed simplified methods of constructing the materials so that most people can make them themselves at a very low cost. They are especially suitable for use by persons who will be teaching in developing countries," Dr. Seng explained.

Both the summer and fall classes will be limited to 20 students.

EDC 371, the summer course, will be offered from June 24 through July 12. Interested persons can register during regular summer registration June 3-4, or on the first day of class, when a special registration will be held.

Spanish Cyclist Attempts 'Impossible'

By Terry Williams

PARIS

Reuter -- Spain's Luis Ocana attempts cycling's "impossible dream" this year -- victory in the three major international tours in the same season.

Eleven men have tried before him and all have failed. Most riders never try.

To attempt all three -- the tours of Spain, France and Italy -- in the same season is seen as madness by most experts. Between them the three races total almost 7,000 miles and 62 days of riding in the space of three months.

But Ocana, riding on the crest of his victory in the tour of France last year, is determined to go ahead if only to become the fourth man to have won all three tours in a career.

Oeana has won both the tour of Spain and the tour of France before. "So my main objective this year is the tour of Italy," he said recently.

If he wins it, he will equal the feat of Frenchman Jacques Anquetil, Belgian Eddy Merckx and Italian Felice Gimondi, the only other men to have won all three in their career.

His major problem will be time. There are only two days between the end of the "Vuelta" in Spain and the "Giro" in Italy, and 18 days between the Italian event and the tour of France. And in those 18 days he has to ride in the Spanish championship. The tour of Spain begins this month and ends on May 21.

Anquetil is one of those who think Ocana is mad. "I am a great friend of Luis and I shall have no hesitation in telling hime he is taking on too much," he said.

"Ocana is hypernervous, even hypersensitive. He is capable of great things for limited periods. But he can not keep still. I doubt if he will ever learn to control his nervous energy."

But the 28-year-old Spanish rider, who for years has lived in southwest France, is not put off. "I have noticed in past years that the tour of Spain was just what I need to put me in top form. So I shall go into the tour of Italy at my peak."

"I want to win the "Giro" so I shall take it easy in Spain," he added.

But experts say it will be impossible for the proud Ocana not to give of his best in Spain to prove once again that he is the best Spanish rider even if he does live abroad.

Between the tour of Italy and the tour of France, the longest and toughest of the three, Ocana said he would rest at home.

"It would need I don't know what to stop me starting the tour in top form," he said. "It seems Merckx is ready and waiting for me. Well, he will have a worthy rival and particularly in the mountains," he added.

Ocana has had an easy start to the season, missing all the major classics. "I would have had to miss them in any case because I needed to rest after all the receptions and races I could not cut after winning the tour of France last year," he said.

This means he will go into his marathon programme fresher than many rider. "In any case I have a lot of physical reserves and the specialist say I need have no worries over chest illnesses, so I think I have every reason to beoptimistic," he added. Chest illnesses have handicapped him in the past.

Double Header Canceled

The double header between Belton and Gatesville scheduled for Wednesday games so the season would end next week. TAMU 'Saladette' New Tomato Texas tomato growers will soon be praising the many advantages of the latest variety developed by Texas Agricultural Experiment Station researcher Paul W. Leeper at the Weslaco Research Center.

"TAMU Saladette (for Texas A&M University) is a new, hardy tomato variety designed to end many of the problems of producers. If Texas production increases as expected, importing tomatoes from other states and Mexico will decrease. High temperature, high humidity, harvesting problems, puffiness and poor yields will no longer plague growers," according to W. R. Cowley, resident director of research at the Weslaco Center.

The plump flavorful tomato is about the size and shape of a large plum. "Saladetre's shape depends on the temperature. Ideal temperatures yield a rounder fruit, while the fruit tends to be more plumshaped as the temperature increases," said Leeper.

Speaking of temperatures that's a part of the story behind the Saladette. Plants were tested under the most adverse conditions available at the Experiment Station at Weslaco. "This vareity came out on top after years of selective breeding and is the most advanced of several thousand lines being developed by TAES. It will set fruit in temperatures up to 100 degrees as well as in high humidity," said Leeper.

The Saladette offers other advantages to tomato producers, retailers, home gardeners and homemakers. Producers easily and profitably harvest this variety by machine or hand. Its tough shining peel protects the firm fruit and resists cracking and rottin. The red fruits are thick-walled and "meaty". And plants are resistant to both Fusarium wilt and grey leaf spot.

Concentrated fruit set more uniform maturity and fruit toughness make Saladette suitable either as a fresh market or processing vareity. Vine height is 12 to 14 inches and width is 14 to 16 inches. "This means it can be planted one foot apart in the row rather than the usual two to three and there can be two rows to a 60 to 80-inch wide bed," said Leeper.

All this results in greater yields. Saladette's yields have been about equal to those of TAMU Chico II and about twice as large as the normal fresh market varieties.

"Saladette producer about twice the yield of green ripe tomato varieties when grown during the regular tomato growing season. There is no comparison if the two are grown together during midsummer because the green ripe varieties will not set at all under these conditions," said Leeper. "It also develops better flavor because it's usually picked when it begins to break color rather than when it's green."

In a Dallas survey made by Dr. Chan Connolly, TAES market researcher at Weslaco, this variety rated over the popular Chico III in general appearance, taste internal texture and firmness. Trade personnel preferred its longer shelf life.

Because of its ability to withstand high temperatures and high humidity, Saladette sets fruit earlier than other varieties. For crops planted in mid-summer for fall maturity, this variety matured fruit as much as twe weeks ahead of TAMU Chico III and as much as six weeks earlier than Homestead, TAMU Monte Grande and Walters varieties.

Home Gardens Give Real Treat

With the rebirth of home vegetable gardens, many folks will be giving their taste buds a real treat as they enjoy the fruits of their labors this season.

Furthermore, a vegetable spcialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service believes that the increase in home gardening will be a boon to the fresh vegetable industry in Texas. He feels more consumers will be "turned on" by fresh produce after having experienced vegetable production themselves on a small scale.

"In recent years many consumers have gotten away from purchasing fresh produce and have gone more for canned, frozen and instant vegetables," points out Sam Cotner. "But the surge in home gardnes should bring some turnabout in this trend."

Cotner believes that consumers now engaging in home vegetable production will have a much better appreciation for the vegetable industry. "They will realize that there are many problems associated with producing vegetables -- the weather, insects and diseases -- plus the costs and labor required and the high perishability of fresh vegetables."

According to the Texas A&M University System specialist, commercial vegetable production in Texas last year was valued at about $200 million, third in the nation. And he feels that the current home gardening craze will increase consumer demand for more fresh vegetables after appetites have been whetted by those fresh vegetables produced in the back yard.

ROCKHOUNDS

Experts identify the world's 2,200 mineral species with X-rays and chemical analysis, but amateur rockhounds distinguish finds by tests of hardness, color, shape, cleavage, and specific gravity, National Geographic says.

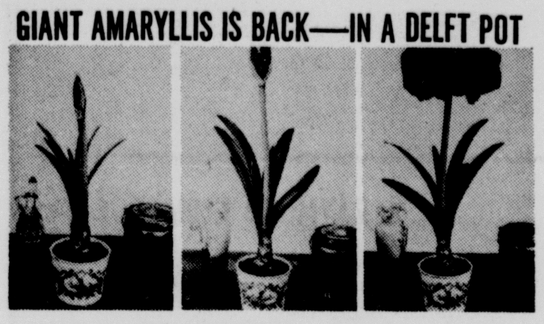
GIANT AMARYLLIS IS BACK—IN A DELFT POT



There's good news for gardening buffs and flower lovers. Imported giant amaryllis bulbs—one of nature's most delightful sights—are in supply again. These bulbs bloom indoors during the winter, and can be moved outdoors in the summer.

What makes the amaryllis a blooming phenomenon is that "you can almost hear it growing," as florists put it. Once the stalk starts developing, it shoots up about one-half inch a day, often reaching two feet in height.

Another plus is their long life. Bulbs should last many years, with proper care. A top-grade bulb should produce two flower stalks with at least four blooms on each. Flowers appear about six to eight weeks after potting in the fall.

This is one reason why amaryllis bulbs have long been a popular gift item. They're especially popular with shut-ins.

Approved artistically, they can give one the reputation of being a blooming genius!

In 16th century Ireland, a boy's right arm was not baptized, so he could strike harder blows with it!

Bug Killer Can Be People Killer

Bug killers can turn into people killers if not properly handled, warns the Texas Safety Association.

The safety group reminds eager spring gardeners to take time to read the entire label before opening an insecticide container. Note warnings, precautions and antidotes. Never ignore label directions to use protective clothing or equipment.

Insecticides should be stored in the original container in a safe place where children and pets cannot accidently come into contact with them.

Empty containers should be destroyed immediately. Some child fatalities have resulted from playing with empty containers.

Keep out of the path of the insecticide mist or spray and never smoke while spraying or dusting. Cover bird baths, pet dishes and fish pools to protect them from drifting poison.

After using an insecticide wash thoroughly and remove contaminated clothing immediately.

The Consumer Alert

by John L. Hill
Attorney General

Several cases involving the use of coupons or coupon books in promotional campaigns or to interest consumers in dealing with certain shops or businesses have recently come to the attention of attorneys in our Consumer Protection Division.

One case involving a sewing machine distributorship operating from within Texas but doing business in other states as well.

The company was sponsoring a simple puzzle contest in which virtually all entrants were notified that they had won second prize.

The "winners" received coupons resembling checks for $200. These "checks" were so realistic that a Texas bank even cashed one. A letter accompanying the coupons stated that they could be applied to the purchase of various models of sewing machines costing between $250 and $300.

It turned out that the same machines were being sold for $200 less by other dealers, so the winner's coupons were actually worthless. Consumers who had purchased sewing machines as a result of these sales tactics were taken in by a promotional "come on."

Under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-consumer Protection Act such practices are prohibited.

Our Consumer Proection attorneys were able to get a permanent injunction against the company's further use of any contest or puzzle that makes prospective customers think they've won something of value when they haven't, against the use of coupons that make prospective customers think they have legal tender or a negotiable document, and against several other practices.

Other states report that promoters are selling coupon books based on an appeal for charity.

These operators are offering consumers the chance to buy books of coupons that can be redemmed at local business establishments for merchandise that usually is worth much more.

Most of the solicitations, they tell us, are made by telephone. The caller gives the impression that part of the proceeds from sale of the books will go to a charity, although only a very small percentage of the money is ever received by any charitable organization.

Consumers should check with local businesses listed as participants in any such promotion to be sure that the terms of the offer are accurate. They should also check all coupon books for the name, address and telephone number of the promoter of the offer.

If you're uncertain about a company, or if its sales tactics seem questionable, my assistants advise that you check 'th your local Better Business Bureau before doing business with them. If there are complaints on file with the BBB, you will be alerted to the fact that some persons have been displeased in their dealings with the company.

If you have a consumer problem, contact the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division or your local district or county attorney for assistance.

Care Can Cut Lumber Costs

When listing the lumber and plywood to be bought for a home project, write down the actual numbers and lengths of pieces of lumber, and the sizes and thicknesses of plywood needed.

A building materials dealer then can match your needs to his stock on hand with minimum wastage. He may have a bin full of short and small pieces that will fill much of your order, thereby reducing the need for cutting up long lengths of lumber and full 4x8-foot sheets of plywood.

Your order will be easier to load out, and chances are you'll save a little money.

16,830,000,000 Pages! That's Fantastic!

By Clarence Duncan

Three huge web offset presses work full time in printing The Living Bible in Versailles, Ky., Kingsport, Tenn., and Taunton, Mass. Already the 16½-million Bibles which have rolled off these presses have consumed a quantity of paper which, when loaded into railroad box cars, would stretch for six miles. That's 38,744,800 pounds of paper packed in 472 box cars.

Even the 15-inch binding cloth in each Bible, rolled out end to end, would reach from Washington, D.C., to Salt Lake City Utah . . . or 1,762 miles in any direction.

While aside from the actual message contained in each Living Bible, the ink used in printing these words has no meaning, the 311,000 pounds of the black stuff would fill six railroad tank cars . . . or a 35,000 gallon olympic swimming pool.

The pages of each of the Bibles are bound to the spine by a high strength nylon thread. Someone has figured that the amount of the thread used to produce the books would wrap around the earth's equator three and one half times. Or, if so inclined, one could fly a kite two-fifths of the way to the moon on this 97,462 miles of thread.

Each Bible has a cover board in front and in back. These are 5½ by 8¾ inches, and the quantity used thus far if they could be stacked so high, would reach 151 miles in the air. This is the distance between London, England, and Paris, France.

Much time is invloved in the production of The Living Bible. So far, the presses have run 7,900 man hours, or four years of 40-hour work weeks for one person, with a two week vacation each year thrown in for good measure.

It takes that long to print 16,830,000,000 (16 billion–830 million) pages of Living Bible.

Nearly 17 million copies of The Living Bible have been sold since this paraphrased version by Dr. Kenneth N. Taylor was issued just after Thanksgiving in 1971. There is no way to measure the spiritual impact of this Bible in the idiom of the day, except to say it has been fantastic.

Sales of The Living Bible could have made Dr. Taylor a wealthy man, but they haven't. Every cent of the royalties from these Bibles goes into a foundation which underwrites the paraphrasing of the Bible in over 100 languages other than English.

When this task is completed, approximately 93 percent of the world's population will be able to read the Bible in a contemporary version of its own native language.

Car Loving Californians Feel Gas Shortage Crunch

LOS ANGELES

Reuter - The gas shortage, which struck here in full force two weeks ago, has already put a severe cramp in the freewheeling motorized lifestyle of Los Angeles and the other automobile metropolises of southern California.

Southern California's who once preferred to live miles out, to drive big cars and journey hundreds of miles in search of weekend recreation in ten-miles-per gallon recreational vehicles are now having second thoughts.

Real estate advertisements, which once lured homebuyers with slogans like "get away from the traffic and the smog," now use pitches like "parkway is just a short drive away" and "This is close-in, chore-free living."

Second hand car dealers report they are crammed with big models that just will not sell anymore.

Motels and roadside restaurants have already reported a drop in business and voice fears it could get worse when the gas shortage cuts into spring and summertime trade.

Los Angeles freeways, once so tightly packed that they were popularly described as 70-mile-per-hour parking lots, now show plenty of open spaces.

With most gas stations closed on Sunday, weekend travel has been cut back sharply. The most surprising pictures show the freeways, which were usually crammed on Sunday, now almost entirely devoid of cars.

Motorists who once languished in bed daily, glorying in the fact that their New York cousins were up early commuting to work, now have to rise early themselves to get in gas lines.

One local economist said: "The only gas lines Californians have known up to now os when the man ahead pulled out from the pump and you pulled in."

The ten million residents in the sixty mile radius around Los Angeles own more than five million vehicles.

Two cars are considered a minimum for most families, and some have three, four, or even five.

With many people commuting scores of miles by car daily, the average trip taken by southern Californians each day is seven miles long.

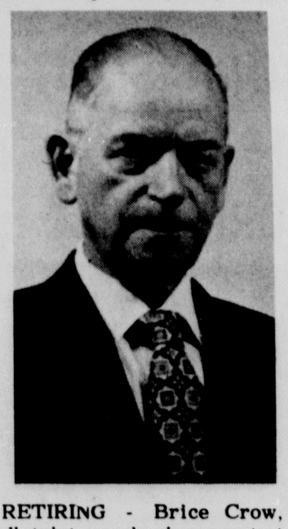
To combat the confusion being caused by the long gasoline lines, California's one-time filmstar Governor Ronald Reagan reluctantly introduced alternate gas sales for odd and even number license plates last week.

But there was no immediate shortening of the lines. In fact they got longer.

Conrad Jamison, economist for California's second largest banking organization the Security Pacific National Bank, says: "Outlying real estate developments have already been pretty hard hit by the fuel crisis.

"If the energy shortage becomes one of the normal facts of life it is going to have a very serious effect on these outlying tracts."

The one bright feature of the gas shortage is that large crowds are once again flocking to local movie theatres. But a rash of good films such as "The Exorcist," "Papillon" and "The Sting" most certainly have helped to draw the crowds.



RETIRING - Brice Crow, district purchasing agent at Alcoa, will retire June 1 after nearly 40 years service with the company. The Alabama native joined the company in 1935 and became purchasing agent at Rockdale Works in 1943, holding that position for more than 21 years.

Memorials Asked For Heart Fund

A memorial gift to the American Heart Association memorial fund is an appropriate way to honor the memory of a friend or loved one. A memorial contribution is a lasting tribute and helps save thousands of lives by aiding in the financing of research, community service, and public education aimed at controlling cardiovascular disease.

Contributions made in memory of a friend or family member are acknowledged by the American Heart Association with a memorial card which is sent to the family of the deceased stating the name of the donor. Contributions may be made in any amount.

More deaths result from heart disease than any other cause, but gains in heart research have been significant in recent years. Some of the most dramatic developments in heart research have been made in Texas research centers.

Memorial contributions should be sent to the American Heart Association Milam County Division, c/o Mrs. Don Humble, Memorial Chairman, 902 E. 7th Cameron, Tx. 76520
